

ATTENTION TO DETAIL

It's the small things that together make a really great home

Chances are timber details including mouldings, skirting and architraves are not top of mind when embarking on a new build or renovation. However, these are the all-important essentials that will add those finishing touches to your home.

Intrim was founded in 1993 by the Quinsey family in Picton, NSW, and has grown to become one of Australia's leaders in finely crafted, quality timber mouldings, skirting, architraves and handrails for residential homes and commercial buildings. The company's customers vary across all sectors, from business clients such as architects, interior designers, builders and carpenters to residential homeowners who engage trades and DIY renovators. Intrim recently collaborated with Three Birds Renovations, Natalee Bowen from Indah Island and Naomi Findlay to name a few.

The product range includes a large selection of timber mouldings and profiles to suit Australian home designs from a wide range of styles and different eras, from Hamptons, French provincial, Edwardian and Georgian to colonial, Victorian, modern contemporary and Art Deco. So what products are available for your home? Skirting boards, skirting blocks, architraves, picture rails, dado rails, chair rails, hand rails, inlay mould for wainscoting, DIY wainscoting kits, timber cornice, sill nosing, corner blocks, wall panelling options such as VJ Board Pro, lining boards, wall battens and decorative timber mouldings such as concave and half rounds.

Skirting is Intrim's largest product category. Check out the website – there's plenty of information on how to choose the design, size, shape, profiles (and more) to get the look you're after. Go to the website to find out things like "do skirting and architraves have to match?"

The company's timber mouldings are available in a selection of materials and finishes, from FJ Pine to MDF, in both primed and un-primed options. Primed is usually preferred as machine-primed timber seals all sides and saves a lot of time on site. Intrim's primed finish is superior to the commodity offerings as it is easier to work with, cutting cleanly without chip-outs, so the tradies love it.

After some wall panels to really make your interiors shine? Intrim launched an exciting new lining board product in early July this year. Intrim Cavetto Wall complements the company's growing range of wall panel styles such as VJ Board Pro, Wainscoting and various lining board and timber moulding designs.

Intrim Cavetto Wall has been designed to capture the company's love of curves and arches, which have gained popularity in architecture and design recently. This wall panelling is a lining board that has a tongue and groove that clips together, allowing for a quick and effective covering of an entire feature wall or decorative bottom half of the wall topped with a chair rail. Each panel is 185mm wide with two distinct scallops which, when joined together, create a continuous scalloped effect. Available in lengths up to 5.4m means entire walls can be covered without joins, creating a seamless finish. Paint to match your room decor or make a statement with colour to draw the eye to the wall panelling. This exciting new product is ideal for hallways, feature walls in living areas, bedrooms and entrance rooms where you want to create impact. The design works with any style – from modern contemporary to coastal beach home to an ultra-luxurious mansion.

Although Intrim is based in Picton, on the outskirts of Sydney, the company has people on the ground in Melbourne and Brisbane and supplies nationwide. intrimmouldings.com.au
