

Intrim Shadowline® installed by Ultimate Doors & Joinery. Photography
by Property Campaigns

GIVE YOUR HOME A MODERN EDGE

Shadowline skirting, the ultimate in contemporary design

Not all homes need decorative skirting boards and wainscoting. A modern style can be achieved by the inclusion of clean lines, flush finishes and distinctive edges. Not only will a shadowline add a modern detail, it can often be used instead of traditional skirting and architraves.

A shadowline ceiling finish can replace a decorative cornice at the top of the wall and can be matched with shadowline door jambs and skirtings. When created with the traditional metal angle method, these are often prone to misalignment. They also have the potential to create a messy shadowline groove where the plaster is finished.

In contrast, the Intrim Shadowline SK800 Skirting and Doorjamb system is designed to be installed prior to the plaster. The plaster is finished to the skirting board or door jamb ridges, providing a strong, aesthetically pleasing finish. This tried and tested system is now the preferred choice for carpenters as it can save up to 30 per cent on installation time and also offers a superior finish at a lower cost.

Homeowners love the look of the sharp, clean lines finished flush with the wall, while the product still provides protection from knocks from the vacuum or kids playing. Intrim Shadowline can be used to create a dramatic effect where the timber skirting moulding follows the steps on a staircase, as seen in this project completed by Ultimate Doors & Joinery.

Intrim Shadowline is available in either a single or two-piece design. The two-piece option allows for the removal of the bottom piece of skirting, which is then re-fixed after flooring such as timber is installed. This is a much smarter option than having to install Scotia, a moulding that is commonly used to cover any gaps between skirting and timber floors.

Available in a range of skirting and groove sizes, Intrim Shadowline gives you the flexibility to select the perfect timber moulding height to match the scale of your grand design.

Intrim was founded in 1993 by the Quinsey family in Picton and has grown to become one of Australia's leaders in finely crafted quality timber mouldings, skirting, architraves and handrails for residential homes and commercial buildings. Australian owned and operated, the company is committed to manufacturing locally, supporting local community through job creation and investing in state-of-the-art equipment and processes. Innovation, reducing environmental impact and helping customers make their interiors spectacular are what drive the team at Intrim. Take a look at projects using Intrim Mouldings on the website gallery and Instagram, Facebook and LinkedIn.

For more information on the large range of timber mouldings, order samples, and to explore the SK800 Shadowline Skirting and Doorjamb system, visit the Intrim Mouldings website at intrimmouldings.com.au 🏠